These can be any number of shapes, forms, sizes, and/or movement.

They usually appear in the form of a sphere, or a hemisphere, or a cone, or a flat, multi-sided form, and may include any number of transparent drops. They are generally used to provide an "impact" effect in a scene. Splashing Splashing is the movement of water in a number of forms, from tiny beads to large volumes. It is produced by the vibration of a water surface at or above the water's natural resonant frequency. In a wide variety of situations, this vibration will occur when the surface of the water vibrates at a frequency similar to that of the sound wave striking the water. When a wave strikes the water's surface at the same frequency, the wave will be reflected and will tend to diminish the original wave. In a non-linear medium, however, these waves can add together, producing a constructive interference (also referred to as a standing wave) that produces an enhanced peak in the wave. For a broad class of materials, this enhancement can produce a local maximum in the wave 82157476af
